

A CEREMONIAL RESOLUTION

24-165

IN THE COUNCIL OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

April 5, 2022

To celebrate and recognize the national and local environmental movements and the contributions the District of Columbia and its residents make to improving the climate and environment, and to recognize April 22, 2022 as Earth Day in the District of Columbia.

WHEREAS, on April 22, 1970, 20 million people across the United States participated in the first Earth Day to protest environmental destruction, marking the beginning of the modern environmental movement;

WHEREAS, the first Earth Day was inspired by Rachel Carson's groundbreaking book, Silent Spring, which documents adverse environmental impacts caused by chemical pesticides, the first color photos of Earth from space, and environmental disasters, including fires in the Cuyahoga River and an oil spill in Santa Barbara;

WHEREAS, United States Senator Gaylord Nelson envisioned the first Earth Day as a nationwide teach-in to educate the public and elected officials about our role in protecting the environment;

WEHERAS, Earth Day is a time to reflect on the impact humans have on Earth, how we affect the global environment and climate, and how that, in turn, affects our own health and well-being;

WHEREAS, Earth Day is an occasion to clean up local parks, green spaces, and waterways and to address everyday actions that contribute to climate change and environmental harm;

WHEREAS, Earth Day is more relevant now than ever as we confront the rise in global temperature, catastrophic weather events, rising sea levels, and longer and more devastating hurricane and wildfire seasons;

WHEREAS, the District of Columbia is vulnerable to the adverse effects of climate change, including increased hurricane intensity, flooding, and sea level rise due to the city's location along tidal waterways and proximity to the Atlantic Ocean;
