A. Rachel Camp
Georgetown University Law Center

Rachel Camp is a Co-Director of the Domestic Violence Clinic and a Professor from Practice at Georgetown University Law Center. She joined Georgetown's faculty in 2011 and became a co-director of the Domestic Violence Clinic (DVC) in 2013. Since graduating from law school in 1999, Professor Camp has worked on behalf of vulnerable and marginalized populations. She has represented, and has supervised law students representing, hundreds of survivors of intimate partner violence in civil protection order and family law cases during her time at Georgetown and while she served as a Clinical Teaching Fellow at the University of Baltimore School of Law's Family Law Clinic. Through her clinical teaching, in addition to representing survivors, Professor Camp has supervised law students on a variety of community legal education and systemic legal reform projects. Professor Camp's co-authored article on integrating community legal education into clinical programs was published in the Clinical Law Review. Between 2000-2008, Professor Camp served as an Assistant General with the Oregon Department of Justice. While there, she served as counsel for a variety of state agencies, including the Department of Human Services in matters involving child abuse and neglect. Prior to her employment at the Oregon Department of Justice, Professor Camp was an attorney at the Maryland Disability Law Center representing patients at a maximum-security state psychiatric hospital in civil and administrative matters. Professor Camp currently serves on the Board of Directors of the D.C. Affordable Law Firm, HopeWorks (the Domestic and Sexual Violence Center of Howard County, Maryland), and Girls on the Run of Central Maryland. In addition to other law review articles and publications, in Coercing Pregnancy, 21 WM. & MARY J. WOMEN & L. 275 (2015), Professor Camp examined the intersection between intimate partner violence (IPV), reproductive coercion, and pregnancy. In her most recent article, Pursuing Accountability for Perpetrators of Intimate Partner Violence: The Peril (an Utility?) of Shame, 98 BOSTON UNIV. L. REV. 1677 (2018), Professor Camp explores how formal or informal methods of shaming perpetrators of IPV can lead to counterproductive outcomes for reducing violence in intimate relationships and dangerous outcomes for survivors. In addition to her work in the DVC, Professor Camp directs the LL.M. program for the D.C. Affordable Law Firm, a program that allows recent law graduates to provide civil legal representation to D.C. residents who fall between 200-400% above the federal poverty rate and who otherwise may be unable to obtain legal representation.
