Requires instruction regarding World War II and the Holocaust for high school students and training for teachers relative to such instruction

Proposed legislation requires each public school governing authority to provide age and grade appropriate instruction on the history of World War II and the Holocaust to each public school student in grades 9 through 12. Instruction must include the role played by African-American and Asian-American soldiers in defeating the Third Reich and liberating Nazi concentration camps, as well as the internment of Japanese Americans in the United States during World War II. Instruction should be integrated into the existing curriculum. Proposed legislation requires the incorporation of teacher training regarding such instruction into the existing in-service training program for those teachers responsible for the instruction. Requires public school governing authorities to make available to its schools the free curriculum from the National WWII Museum in New Orleans. Effective upon governor's signature.

EXPENDITURE EXPLANATION

There may be additional cost and workload associated with providing instruction to students or in-service training to teachers on World War II and the Holocaust to the extent existing curricula must be modified in order to do so.

The Department of Education (LDE) reports that World War II and the Holocaust are already listed in existing content standards. These standards also require an examination of the role of minority groups in the military and how it changed their status in society. If the instruction is only provided to students in relevant history and social studies courses, there will not be increased costs to local schools. However, if the instruction must be provided each year to students in grades 9 through 12, schools may have to provide instruction to students who are not enrolled in relevant courses through other means. The methodology that each district and school may choose to accomplish this is speculative, but the LFO assumes this may be achieved through no- or low-cost modifications to existing curriculum during annual content review and revisions.
