EXPENDITURE EXPLANATION

Local governmental expenditures will increase to the extent each school without a resource officer places an armed school resource officer at each public school for the duration of the school day. It is not required by the legislation, but school districts may choose to increase security through these measures. To the extent that school districts choose to increase security measures as per this legislation, the cost to local school boards will be significant. The exact cost of a school resource officer will vary across the state. For illustrative purposes, an article in The Advocate from March 28, 2013 quoted the Pointe Coupee Parish Sheriff's Office proposal for the school board to spend approximately $120,000 per year to hire three certified school resource officers (or $40,000 per officer). It is possible that local law enforcement may supplement some of the costs for school boards to hire school resource officers, but agreements could vary across districts.

There are approximately 1,575 public schools in Louisiana. The Department of Education does not collect personnel data on the number of school resource officers currently working with school districts. If we assume that 25% of the public schools (approximately 394) do not currently have a resource officer and choose to place one at their school for the duration of the day, using the above referenced amount of $40,000 per officer, the cost would be approximately $15.8 million statewide to hire additional officers. The total cost to have an individual resource officer at each school could be more or less than what was indicated in the newspaper article and will vary across the districts.

REVENUE EXPLANATION

There is no anticipated direct material effect on governmental revenues as a result of this measure.
