Research Analysis

The committee substitute to HB 1599 clarifies the definition of video services by specifying that the wireline facilities referred to in the definition are those that are owned, controlled, constructed, or operated by the providers of such video service. Further, the measure provides that video services do not include direct-to-home satellite services that are transmitted from a satellite to a customer's premises without using the public right-of-way or video programming accessed via a service that enables users to access content over the internet, including streaming.
