Research Analysis

HJR1054, is a constitutional amendment that changes the criteria for voter proposed changes to state law by requiring the voter percentage thresholds for a legislative proposal, initiative petition or referendum petition to be met by a percentage of voters from each county. Currently, the percentage of legal voters necessary to propose a legislative or constitutional change is tied to the statewide voter count.

The voter percentage threshold are 8 percent for a legislative proposal, 15 percent for an initiative petition and 5 percent for a referendum petition.
