(2) To declare that peace and stability in the area are in the political, security, and economic interests of the United States and are matters of international concern;

(3) To make clear that the United States' decision to establish diplomatic relations with the People's Republic of China rests upon the expectation that the future of Taiwan will be determined by peaceful means;

(4) To consider any effort to determine the future of Taiwan by other than peaceful means, including by boycotts or embargoes, a threat to the peace and security of the Western Pacific area and of grave concern to the United States;

(5) To provide Taiwan with arms of a defensive character; and

(6) To maintain the capacity of the United States to resist any resort to force or other forms of coercion that would jeopardize the security, or the social or economic system, of the people on Taiwan; and

WHEREAS, for forty years, the Taiwan Relations Act has been a source of clarity and consistency for U.S. policy in balancing relations with Taiwan and the People's Republic of China (PRC); and

WHEREAS, the Taiwan Relations Act safeguards against any administration sacrificing U.S. interests in Taiwan in pursuit of improved relations with PRC and deters the threat of aggression in the region by PRC; and

WHEREAS, Taiwan is one of the oldest and most stable democracies in Southeast Asia and has been a multiparty democracy since 1987; and

WHEREAS, Taiwan is the most populous state and the largest economy that is not a member of the United Nations; and

WHEREAS, Taiwan has a strong information technology industry, with Amazon, IBM, Microsoft, and Google having operations there; and

WHEREAS, there is a long-standing history of friendship, trade, and cultural relations between Taiwan and Tennessee; and

WHEREAS, Taiwan is Tennessee's seventh-largest export market in Asia, with more than $265 million worth of products exported annually; and

WHEREAS, Taiwan has invested more than $220 million in Tennessee, with 272 jobs supported by these investments; and

WHEREAS, more than 3,000 jobs in Tennessee are supported by exports of goods and services to Taiwan; and
