Whereas the number of political prisoners across the world, including cases of journalists, academics, peace and political activists, political oppositionists and dissidents, and are more than 1 million political prisoners worldwide;

Whereas authoritarian and repressive regimes around the world have engaged in systematic destruction of independent voices, including but not limited to the Russian and Belarusian Governments;

Whereas national governments and legislative bodies have an obligation to raise awareness about the plight of political prisoners;

Whereas national governments and legislative bodies should advocate with states holding political prisoners their prompt release;

Whereas, on October 30, 1974, Soviet human rights activists and dissidents initiated the idea of marking the day of political prisoners in the USSR and consequently held a hunger strike that day while in jail;

Whereas, in 1978, the Moscow Helsinki Group—founded in 1976, disbanded in 1982 due to KGB intimidation, and reestablished by former USSR political prisoners and human rights activists in 1989—declared October 30 Political Prisoner Day; and

Whereas October 30, 1991, marked the first annual Remembrance Day for the Victims of Political Repression observed in Russia: Now, therefore, be it
