Analysis by the Legislative Reference Bureau

Under current law, the Department of Justice (DOJ) provides grants to counties that have established qualifying treatment and diversion (TAD) programs for persons who are or may be charged with, or who are convicted of, offenses related to the person's use or abuse of alcohol or other drugs. TAD programs are intended to offer alternatives to prosecution or incarceration for offenders with substance abuse problems in order to reduce recidivism, promote public safety, and reduce prison and jail populations.

In order to qualify, a county's program must meet certain criteria, including offering treatment for the offender's substance abuse, and coordinating with other specialists, including mental health treatment providers, social services providers, and case workers in order to provide intensive case management. Each qualifying program must be developed in collaboration with representatives from the judicial system, law enforcement and corrections, social and welfare service providers, and mental health and substance abuse treatment providers. Further, each county that receives a TAD grant creates an oversight committee with representatives from those agencies or services to administer and evaluate the program. A qualifying TAD program is subject to state audits and each county that receives a TAD grant must submit an annual report to DOJ and to the oversight committee that details its progress in promoting public safety, reducing recidivism and lowering costs, and meeting the treatment and other needs of program participants.

Under this bill, a county may receive a TAD grant for a program that treats persons who have a diagnosed mental illness and who are or may be charged with, or who are convicted of, offenses related to the person's mental illness. Under the bill, the same qualifying, auditing, oversight, and other standards that apply to TAD programs for offenders with substance abuse problems also apply to TAD programs for offenders who are diagnosed with a mental illness. The bill increases funding for TAD grants and directs DOJ to allocate the increased amount to providing grants to counties with TAD programs that address the needs of persons with mental illness.

For further information see the state and local fiscal estimate, which will be printed as an appendix to this bill.
